Case Study: Compton Road

“Our home is much more comfortable now following the external wall insulation installation. It doesn't lose as much heat and only drops by 2 degrees overnight. We always had a back corner which was a cold spot but now that cold area has gone. We are already saving around 30% on our gas bill due to our reduced usage.

I was pleased that SERS were able to put back the Tudor effect detail onto the property and I'm very happy with the replication. The SERS site team were always polite and helpful.” Mr Clement

This privately owned property in Wolverhampton had external wall insulation installed in late 2012 to take advantage of funding and improve its thermal performance. Located on a busy residential road this house was insulated as a standalone one off property. At the initial survey stage the client made it clear that the appearance of the property must remain exactly the same. As a result a large area of the front of the property had brick slip detailing applied; as well as under the bay window. The Tudor detail was recreated on top of the insulation using timber. As shown in the pictures the property looks exactly the same however a new coat of render has freshened it up dramatically and now the property stands proud as it once did previously. A single SERS team were dedicated to the project who worked from concept to completion to ensure the client's needs were met as well as meeting the regulations put into place by building control.
